Recent visits to the offices of senators Byrd and Rockefeller included requests for a Department of Defense appropriation for work in agile computing; creation of an advising program for pre-health professions majors to assure higher bachelor’s degree completion and successful acceptance into graduate programs; and work by Shepherd environmental studies majors on water quality of the Potomac River. Shepherd also hand-delivered to Representative Capito the Town of Shepherdstown’s appropriations request for the over/underpass for the Route 480 pedestrian crossing between East and West campuses.

   The State legislative session is underway with Shepherd’s request for $10 million on a $90 million bonding request for the construction of the Center for Contemporary Art, Phase II. Other legislative news includes a personnel bill that would create new positions at the West Virginia Higher Education Policy Commission (HEPC) and more oversight over institutions’ HR functions by the HEPC. Another bill, the Flexibility Bill, would provide West Virginia higher education institutions more flexibility at the local level in setting tuition and fees, and managing procurement and contracts, bringing other public universities in line with the flexibility provided to WVU and Marshall.
